commission and a Record member.

The visit was an opportunity for the commission to directly observe the training site in the quarry, which Patriot Training Foundation had been operating since 2016. The group was informed earlier this year that a CUP is required for such activity.

The gathering also became an opportunity for both sides of the disagreement to air their frustrations in front of the commission.

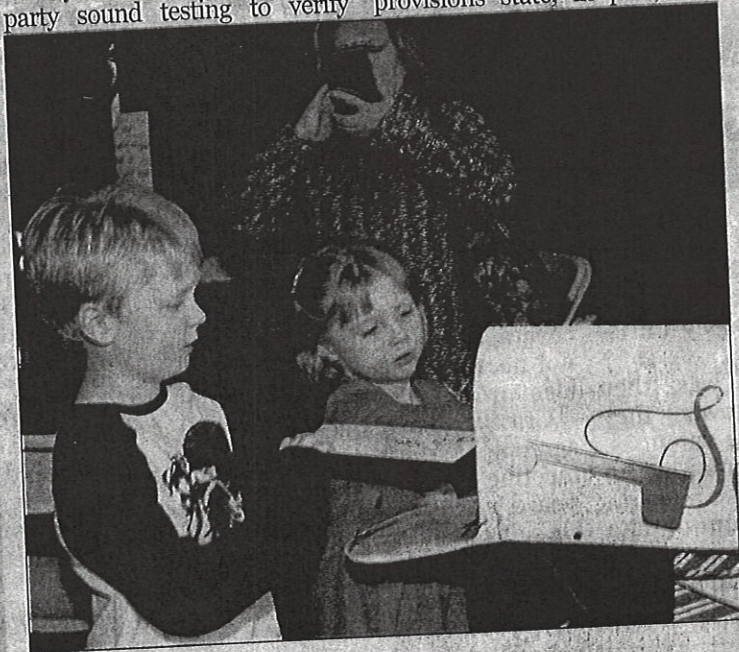

Opponents repeated their most pressing concern, which is that the noise of gunfire will be a disturbance to neighboring property owners, including within Innsbrook, which is nearby. Boyce called for third-party sound testing to verify form realistic training. Hausher commented that he feels the tone and statements of opponents have been disrespectful to his organization and the groups it serves.

Ordinance violation

One opponent of the CUP for Patriot Training Foundation, nearby property owner Ed Anderson, has notified The Record and the county commission that he believes the organization committed an illegal act by operating in the quarry without a permit.

Anderson referenced a section of the Warren County Zoning Order, which governs land usage. The order's enforcement provisions state, in part, that
