1,000-foot buffer. You're not asking any other pharmacy, the pharmacy downtown, to enforce the 1,000-foot buffer, and they deal in much harder stuff than we're talking about here."

Kisner also objected to Mayor Dan Rowden previously stating that the city needed to have the buffer zone to protect local children, saying state regulators are already mandating adequate protections. He asked the board to consider reducing the buffer to 150 or 200 feet.

Aldermen declined to make that change, with Rowden stating that the city's decision isn't an overreach because it uses the default buffer established by state law.

In addition to the 1,000 feet rule, the city will require every marijuana-related business to receive a conditional use permit from the board of aldermen. That means each business must come before the board to be individually approved and could be subject to additional restrictions.

Although the city isn't allowed to place any "unduly burdensome" regulations on medical marijuana businesses, it has some leeway to set restrictions that protect surrounding property owners from potential nuisances.

be licensed by the state and is restricted by the following rules:

- No outdoor operation or storage.
- No on-site usage of marijuana products.
- Hours of operation limited to 8 a.m. to 10 p.m., Monday through Saturday. No sales permitted on Sundays.
- Nonemployees not allowed in the building after hours.
- Must have an odor control system as necessary to prevent odor from becoming a nuisance.
- Must meet security standards established by state regulation.

Industrial facility rules

Cultivation, product manufacturing, testing and transportation facilities for medical marijuana are all restricted to areas that are zoned for heavy industry under the new rules.

All facilities require an appropriate state license and are limited by the following restrictions:

- Cultivation allowed indoors only.
- No outdoor operation or storage.
- Odor control systems must meet minimum state standards and prevent nuisance for surrounding properties.
- No on-site marijuana usage except as authorized by state regulations at testing facilities.
- Facilities must be closed

Let's be honest.
Going to the dentist is a priority for most people, especially if they are getting checkups that certainly doesn't fit people's to-do lists.
Fear of the dentist is a free time, and cost, common reasons to skip office. So why visit so often? The main reason these bians are not only to make don't have cavities.
A thorough evaluation of lips, gums, cheeks, throat is performed oral cancer and other diseases. The gums for gingivitis and gum a sign of active infection levels are recorded.
