Did you ever buy a bundle of 50 or 100 cabbage plants and set them all out? Now let's do a little figuring. How many cabbage heads can your family eat in a week? Two? Three? These figures are reasonable. Our normal harvest period for cabbage is about six weeks. Six times three is eighteen — so a good figure to plant would be two dozen cabbage plants. Not 50 or 100!

Too many of us plant by habit rather than by plan. There are over 50 different kinds of vegetables you can plant in your garden. How many different kinds do you plant? Probably less than a dozen, and they are the same ones year after year — radishes, lettuce, of your plan. Certain varieties of asparagus, beans, sweet corn, cabbage, cucumbers, cantaloupes, peppers, peas, tomatoes, and watermelons are resistant to one or more diseases. This is a built-in resistance. You should take advantage of it.

There are many other ideas you could incorporate into your garden plan. If you make a good plan you will come closer to growing what you actually need, besides making gardening a pleasure, not a chore.

Bus Drivers of Union Public Schools — we salute you

Who are these brave courageous men, these honorable souls that defy devastating accidents? Can't you guess? These are the same men who at times may be tired and cranky but usually are smiling and forgiving. They can't be blamed for being just a little cranky. All they do is get up at 5 a.m., gulp a cup of coffee, race out to their cold damp motor vehicles and take off. From there they go to each of their designated stops and on jumps not one, not two, but three little juveniles. Each is equipped with such delicacies as sling-shots, bean shooters, yo-yo's, toy tanks, guns, and cannons that really work; water pistols, and, you name it.

Oh, kids are fine, he loves them. But just ge 60 of them together and what have you got? 60 mouths all screaming, bawling, crying, and screeching; 240 arms and legs flying all over the place including his back; he goes cross-eyed trying to watch all of them at once; and his earplugs don't help a bit.

To the bus drivers of Union Public Schools — all that can be said is GOOD LUCK, and we sympathize.
