David Smith grew up in New Haven, Connecticut, during the civil rights movement of the 1960s. His family was one of the few African American families in the neighborhood, and he faced discrimination every day. Despite the challenges, David excelled in school and was determined to make something of himself.

His father, a postal worker, instilled in him a strong work ethic and a desire to achieve. David attended New Haven High School, where he was one of the only African American students. He joined the science club and was known for his talent in mathematics and science.

After high school, David attended Howard University in Washington, D.C., where he studied business administration. He was active in student life and was known for his leadership skills. After graduation, he returned to New Haven and became involved in community service, working to improve the education and economic opportunities for minority students.

Today, David Smith is a successful business owner and community leader in New Haven. He is dedicated to giving back to the community and helping others achieve their dreams. His story is a testament to perseverance and hard work, and he inspires others to follow their own paths to success.

Photo and Story by Tony Carosella
www:newhavennews.net