The president said, in part:

"At present our market for cotton in China. The boycott of our goods during the past year was especially the cotton manufacturers. This government is doing, and will continue to do, all it can to stop the boycott. But there is need to be taken toward this end in which the assistance of the Congress.

"We must insist firmly on our boycott. China must beware of persisting in conduct to which we can not hope to be taken.

"But we in the turn must recognize exactly as we insist upon our right to go into the international court of justice, that we go in with clean hands. We cannot ask China to do us justice unless we do our part to bring about our goods in China was undoubtedly toward the Chinese who come to terms with us. This attitude of ours does not just to the Chinese who come to terms with us. This attitude of ours does not just to the Chinese who come to terms with us. But the fact remains that in the boycott we come short of our duty to the people of this country.
