Pruitt, if he could have seen the response by the caring people of Backstoppers, he would have rested easy.

Jeff Backhaus, chairman of the Warren County Backstoppers organization, said the people from this county are eager to donate each year. They also are ready to empty their wallets during the annual auction. He said he often gets calls from donors including Cardinals baseball tickets, handmade quilts, hog processing, handcrafted wooden flags, crossbows or pedal firetrucks.

Backhaus said organizers are once again grateful for the outpouring of generosity from the community.

Other first responders remembered from Warren County are Paul Friske and Vernon Seals. Friske, employed by the Hawk Point Police Department and the Warren County Sheriff's Office, said the accident in 2010, Seals, of the Truesdale Police Department, was also struck by a vehicle during a call and died in 2002.

Backstoppers was founded in 1995. A 30-member board of directors manages the financial support offered to families. The organization believes it is obligated to care for "the loved ones of those who have protected us."

Truesdale aldermen expressed ongoing challenges that would come with the project. Primarily, Truesdale would have to add police staff to adequately patrol the area, and would eventually assume the cost of maintaining streets, lights and utilities.

Mayor Chris Watson expects the city's staff might double in size along with the town's population. He's hopeful that city hall would have time to adjust as the development progresses.

"This is going to be in phases. It's not like they're going to have all these done within the first year," Watson commented. "They're looking at probably at the end of five years to fill this. With additional real estate and property tax income, it's going to open up opportunities for the city to hire more personnel."

Watson said the city's other concern is how the development will affect homeowners in the Heritage Hills subdivision, which is directly adjacent to the west side of the development area.

For that reason, the city is seeking input from residents before giving final approval to the project. A date hasn't been set, but the board of aldermen plans to hold a town hall meeting for residents to ask questions and express any concerns. The large population influx will inevitably include many school-age children, Watson added, so he hopes to have input from the Warren County R-III School District.

Unless presented with a major concern, Watson predicted the board of aldermen is likely to approve the development.

"We are substantially growing year after year. It's amazing," Watson commented. "The biggest issues that we run into are growing pains. It's things we run into that we've never dealt with before. It's a day-by-day learning experience."

The next step for the developers is to secure sewer service from the city of Warrenton. Once that's done, Watson said Truesdale will schedule a town hall meeting. A final decision from the board of aldermen would come after that.

According to the Missouri Department of Transportation, the U.S. 61 construction project is expected to be complete in just six months. The project will extend the 61 bypass south of St. Charles, from the Route 61 exit north of I-70 to the Route 61 exit south of I-70. The project will consist of a two-lane divided highway with an approximately 100-foot wide right-of-way.

FEMA's National Flood Insurance Program (NFIP) protects property and businesses from flood damage. Statewide, about 40% of the homes in Missouri are covered by the NFIP. The NFIP is one of the ways the federal government helps states protect property and businesses from flood damage. The NFIP is a private insurance program that is funded by premiums paid by policyholders. The program is administered by FEMA on behalf of the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development. The NFIP is a source of financial assistance for homeowners, renters, and businesses in flood-prone areas. The NFIP provides flood insurance to policyholders who purchase flood insurance and who agree to abide by the terms of the NFIP. The NFIP is designed to be self-supporting, and is funded by premiums paid by policyholders.
